Citizens in a Global Society
What Does it Mean?
A Message from the EDITOR

Opportunities Abound

As I write this, it is a frosty 21 degrees on our beautiful campus. The sun may be shining brightly, but it is cold outside! However, by the time this issue of the Viewpoint reaches you, it will most likely be warm in Nevada and the early daffodils should be poking their heads above the ground as the trees begin to bud and the grass starts to green.

Spring not only brings more daylight and pleasant temperatures to campus, it also brings many visitors and opportunities. All of us look forward to Founder’s Day Weekend on April 4-6. The week before Founder’s is “C” for Yourself! Weekend, March 28-30? Have you encouraged her to attend? If you are a P.E.O. member, has your chapter offered to send a student to visit campus?

• Seeing is believing. Have you told a prospective student about “C” for Yourself! Weekend, March 28-30? Have you encouraged her to attend? If you are a P.E.O. member, has your chapter offered to send a student to visit campus?

• Reunions provide us a great time to catch up with former classmates. Have you shared with a prospective student how successful the women with whom you went to college have been? This year’s alumnae award winners are outstanding, and might just inspire a student or two who is thinking about Cottey.

• A new building is great addition to campus, but to a student artist it represents a college willing to invest in her future education. Again, this is another talking point to share with a prospective student who has an interest in the fine arts. Let’s spread the good news!

I hope to see you at one of our spring events. While it is cold outside, we will be dreaming of warm weather, but also looking for those opportunities to tweet, email, call, or visit with a prospective student to tell her how these amazing spring celebrations can affect her. We hope you will, too.

As always, you are invited to share your thoughts with me at sreed@cottye.edu.

Sincerely,

Steve Reed, editor

Letters to the Editor

We received this email in response to the Who, What, When that appeared in the last issue of the Viewpoint.

Dear Ms. Cordova.

The photo probably dates from the mid-1950’s, which is my educated guess considering the style of eye glasses and with a pill-box hat, both of which were in fashion at the time.

Carol Littleton, Cottey, 1962

Carol Littleton, Class of 1962, is a film editor in Hollywood.

I realize that current planning pays little attention to readability by the readers. Come on! Yellow print on a white glossy background. White print on a golden orange background? A blurry photo with a group of alums printed so small we need a magnifying glass to distinguish faces? The fonts of the print in one article, also on glossy paper, had thinner lines than the darker names, and was absolutely unreadable!

These are all pet peeves of mine. It is part of journalism to create READABLE print, not just artsy page design. Please start thinking about color values, (light on light doesn’t work). Use good contrast between print and paper. Make print dark and large enough to be read.

If you want us older alums to read your magazine, then check for good print contrast....black on white still works unless the lines are too thin. Remember that we are getting elderely eyes. Please make the reading easier on them.

I’ve just finished reading every word of the Fall 2013 magazine. It is wonderful. Every page is beautiful, informative, and exciting.

I graduated in the class of 1952, and now I have a granddaughter who is applying to Cottey for next year. So I am definitely doubly interested in every printed word.

This is so much more “exciting” than the old newspaper. This is just so much more personal and alive! Great work! Thank you so much for your efforts to make it “excellent”.

Cottey’s mission explicitly states that the College will educate women to be “learners, leaders, and citizens” in a global society. An article published in Diversity & Democracy in fall 2013 summarizes the importance of this goal:

_The twenty-first century is here, and higher education must prepare students for it by teaching them to build a sustainable future, to be scholars of community change, and to engage as responsible workers and citizens in a world defined by diversity._ (17)

At Cottey, we define community service broadly to include campus, local, national, and global communities. We also offer our students service learning opportunities during which they participate in service projects with the advantage of connecting their experiences to their classroom instruction.

Our leadership programs intentionally include opportunities for students not only to participate in but also to lead service projects. The Presidential Project which fourth-level Leadership, Experience, and Opportunities (LEO) participants may elect to complete serves as a capstone experience to afford students an opportunity to lead a service project of their choosing. I am pleased by the diversity of the projects proposed over the past ten years. They range from educating about the importance of funding mosquito nets for African communities to interacting with Nevada residents at the local senior center. When a political election is near, Cottey students are informed and urged to participate. The film Iron Jawed Angels is shown regularly to remind students of the suffering and courage of the women who won the right for women to vote. They see that they must use this hard-won freedom.

These diverse efforts to practice citizenship were recently recognized when Cottey College was selected for the second year to be listed on a national honor roll for our commitment to service. Cottey was one of only 242 schools in the nation to be recognized and one of six in Missouri. Cottey’s activities ranged from dialogues to physical labor both to understand and enact citizenship. Cottey intentionally seeks to enable students to develop a sense of civic responsibility that is demonstrated in community service, service learning, political participation, and actions and advocacy for protecting our environment. As in the past, we anticipate seeing our graduates become civic leaders across the nation and around the world.

Sincerely,

Judy R. Rogers

This issue of the Viewpoint is based on the Cottey College Mission Statement: Cottey College, an independent liberal arts college, educates women to be contributing members of a global society through a challenging curriculum and a dynamic campus experience. In our diverse and supportive environment, women develop their potential for personal and professional lives of intellectual engagement and thoughtful action as learners, leaders, and citizens.

Founder’s Day: Where Inspiring Women Gather

By Karma Quick-Panwala ‘01, CCAA Executive Board Director

Quick – mark your calendars, book your hotel rooms, and figure out the carpool arrangement! Founder’s Day 2014, will be here before you know it, and Cottey is accepting registrations now. Founder’s Day weekend falls on April 4, 5, and 6. While all alumnae are always welcome home, reunions for those classes ending with a 4 or a 9, and 2013 will be celebrated. (Class Agents for those years: start brainstorming with your class for that perfect skit to share at the Homecoming Celebration!)

What can you expect at Founder’s? There will be opportunities to meet current and former faculty, to interact with students, and to tour Cottey’s ever-growing campus. There will be a time to celebrate Virginia Alice Cottey, our founder, and remind ourselves of her commitment to women’s education as well as the challenges and successes she encountered to bring us Cottey College.

Also, be sure to secure your tickets in advance for the Founder’s Day luncheon. You’ll hear from our outstanding alumnae citizens—our inspirational CCAA Award winners—and Dr. Rogers’ “State of the College” address. Who are these inspirational women we will be recognizing at the Saturday luncheon?

Distinguished Alumna
Robin McClellan ’79, Perth AU and Singapore - career diplomat and foreign relations.

Outstanding Young Alumna
Sarah Adams Cornell ’99 - Oklahoma - service to her community and her state.

Alumna Service
Jen Charpentier ’64 – Louisiana - Former member of the CCAA Executive Board and Co-chair for the Alumnae Steering Committee for the A Defining Moment campaign.

Mary Jane Bradley ’69 – Kansas City - A member of the Alumnae Steering Committee for the campaign; a member of the Awareness Event sub-committee; fundraiser and supporter of Cottey. Mary Jane is coordinator of the pendant program for the Alumnae Challenge for the FAIB.

Honorary Alumna
Mary McNerney - Nevada, MO - Associate Professor of Education at Cottey. Mary will be retiring at the end of the school year.

Friend of the College

All in all, Founder’s promises to be full of wonderful memories, great food (including baked potato soup!), and a chance to celebrate this incredible college and the woman who brought her vision into reality.

SAVE THE DATE!

Founder’s Day Weekend
April 4–6, 2014

Nancy Bogart ’88 (left, with son Zac) was the Distinguished Alumna Award recipient in 2013. What inspiring women will you meet at Founder’s this year?
I did not expect to find a connection to Cottey College as I walked through Seattle’s Museum of Flight recently. The museum’s exhibits cover all aspects of aviation, from the Wright brothers to the International Space Station. Imagine my surprise and delight at finding a familiar name among the World War II displays, that of pilot and Cottey College alumna Dora Dougherty Strother. Her path links Cottey College to an integral time in U.S. history, when women were finally allowed to fly in the military, but not officially recognized as part of the armed forces.

Dora Dougherty was only 18 when she earned her pilot’s license through the Civilian Pilot Training Program in 1940. When she heard about the Women’s Airforce Service Pilot (WASP) program in 1942, she left school and worked at an airport to accumulate enough hours to apply. She completed WASP training and graduated in 1943. Dougherty had myriad jobs as a WASP. She towed aerial targets for anti-aircraft gunnery, ferried aircraft, performed flight training, and flew remote-controlled drones. However, her most memorable mission came in the summer of 1944.

The First Women to Pilot a B-29

Boeing’s B-29 Superfortress had just been released, and it was the Air Force’s largest and heaviest bomber to date. It hadn’t been put through the years of testing that Boeing had performed on its predecessor, the B-17. It was quite known for having engine fires, which caused the fighter pilots considerable worry. Lieutenant Colonel Paul W. Tibbets (who would later pilot the Enola Gay, which dropped the atomic bomb on Hiroshima) was in charge of training the pilots on this new behemoth, but many of his soldiers simply refused to fly it. To show the men that the B-29 was both safe and reliable, Tibbets decided to train two women to fly it.

In June of 1944, Lt. Col. Tibbets recruited Dora Dougherty and Dorothea “Didi” Moorman to fly demos of the B-29. Neither woman had ever flown a four-engine plane before. The WASPs were trained on the bomber for just three days, and not told about the engines’ tendency to catch fire (although there was such a fire on their first check ride). To avoid the engines overheating, Tibbets trained the women not to perform the standard power checks before taking off. Following their brief instruction, Dougherty and Moorman flew multiple demonstrations of the B-29 “Ladybird” without any other pilots aboard. Fellow WASP Mary Ellen Keil described the demos: “They had the two women flying around to the various B-29 bases and the men would see them land the plane and get out. That would give them second thoughts, when they saw a woman flying the plane!”

These flights were quickly stopped a few days later, when Air Staff Major General Barney Giles told Tibbets that the women were “putting the big football players to shame.” The Army also harbored fears of a fatal accident and the bad publicity it would bring. Dougherty and Moorman were sent back to Eglin Army Air Field, but their mission had been a success: Tibbets’ men finally consented to fly the B-29, and Dougherty and Moorman became the first women to pilot a B-29 from start to finish.*

After the WASP Program

After the WASP program was ended, Dougherty became a flight instructor at the University of Illinois. In 1950 she was chief pilot for the school’s aviation psychology lab. She achieved a master’s degree from the university in 1953, and earned her Ph.D. in aviation psychology at New York University. Dougherty worked briefly for Martin Aircraft, then took a job at Bell Helicopter, where she eventually became the director of Human Factors Engineering and Cockpit Arrangement. In 1961, she set two world records for rotorcraft, one for altitude and one for distance. Dougherty was also in the Air Force Reserve, rising to the level of lieutenant colonel.

* Mildred “Micky” Axton was the first woman to fly a B-29 on May 4, 1944. She was a WASP test pilot who was invited to take control of the bomber on a test flight. (She was not checked out as first pilot, unlike Dougherty and Moorman.)

A t Cottey, we acknowledge our students not only for their academics but also for their service and dedication to their local communities. These same young women were once the students who were volunteering in your churches, your food pantries, and your schools. They chose to come to Cottey College because they knew they would have the opportunities to enhance their leadership skills and continue giving back through community service. Please help us to discover the next round of Cottey Citizens by recognizing the volunteers in your local community and sharing the following scholarship opportunities with them:

Regional Leadership Achievement Award Program:
For students living in Missouri’s Barton, Bates, Cedar, Dade, St. Clair, and Vernon counties and Kansas’ Bourbon county, the RLAAP scholarship (up to $3,500 per academic year) is granted to all students who have demonstrated excellent leadership and/or community service, and have at least a 3.0 GPA and 23 ACT/1060 SAT.

The Aspiring Women Leader’s Scholarship:
This new scholarship has been created to recognize students who have already developed leadership skills in high school and who desire to continue to grow as a leader. Five $3,000 scholarships will be awarded to incoming freshmen for the fall 2014 and fall 2015 classes.

Girl Scout Gold Award Recipients:
To recognize such an amazing feat, Cottey College will award every Gold Award recipient with a $1000 scholarship per academic year.

When a student graduates from Cottey she is prepared to succeed in her career and is well on her way to becoming a true learner, leader, and citizen in a global society. If you have a student who has already started her journey toward greatness, please contact the Enrollment Management Office and share her story with us.

Breaking news: high school girls who attend our Summer Workshop in June and later enroll at Cottey College are eligible for a $12,000 scholarship.

In lieu of summer high school programs in science, leadership, and fine arts, the College will offer one revised program that has been designed to meet the demands and interests of today’s top academic students. This new summer program is a Workshop for Women Who are Going Places and will offer rising sophomore-, junior-, and senior-aged girls insight into leadership, skill development, and college and career preparation while showcasing everything Cottey has to offer for their future education.

In addition to the skills that each participant will take home, all students who chose to attend Cottey College will also be awarded a $12,000 scholarship ($3,000 annually).

When I try to define citizenship, what comes vividly to mind for me are a few early Saturday mornings from my tenure as a Scoutmaster, standing in a church parking lot, steaming cup of coffee in hand, loading up a van full of young Boy Scouts for a three-and-a-half hour drive to Jefferson City, the Missouri state capital. (I have two sons, those of you who raised daughters may have similar experiences with the Girl Scouts.) Upon arriving, we'd wake the boys, have them tuck in their uniform shirts, and meet our state representative for a tour of the capitol building and a lesson in Missouri civics and government. Afterwards, we'd take a group photo on the capitol steps, get a free pen or other promotional item from our representative, and head off for fast food and the drive home (which was always much noisier than the drive to Jeff City). I have wondered how much a 13-year-old boy grasped the notion of citizenship after this trip. I certainly hoped it at least planted a seed as the Scouts continued their advancement.

In Cottey’s mission statement, the College says it will educate women “to be learners, leaders, and citizens” in a global society. But what exactly does it mean to be a citizen in a global society? And, how do we educate people to be a citizen?

Too often, citizenship is strictly defined by national affiliation or a political ideal. I was born in the United States, therefore, I am a US citizen. Good citizenship certainly encompasses obeying the laws of my country, e.g., paying my taxes and obeying the traffic regulations in my community. On another level, we talk about the obligations of citizenship such as the duty to participate in elections or serve on a jury. On its face, citizenship seems uncomplicated. An elementary school poster on citizenship lists four criteria to being a good citizen. They are:

- Help make things better
- Respect authority and obey laws
- Protect the environment
- Be active in the community

Certainly what we thought it meant to be a good citizen in 1942 was changing in the 1960s and with today’s technological globalization is probably even different still. Those social and cultural contexts have changed noticeably over the last 50 years.

Even with changes in the definition of citizenship, real and perceived, civic engagement has always been a part of what it means to be a citizen at Cottey College.

- Nancy Kerbs, director of assessment and institutional research, revisited speeches by our founder, Virginia Alice Cottey, and found that—from the beginning—she was a proponent of civic engagement as part of the learning process at her institution. Her article begins on page 9.
- Current faculty and staff outline some of the ways Cottey students are engaged in their communities.
- Dr. Julie Tietz, professor of psychology, tells about the psychology department’s afterschool youth program called STOMP.
- Renee Hampton, experiential learning and student success coordinator, shares how Cottey students have helped rebuild Joplin, Missouri, after the devastating tornado in May 2012.
- We’ve also included some alumnae and current student opinions on what they believe it means to be a citizen in a global society.

Regardless of what your own personal definition of citizenship may be, I believe we can all be proud of how Cottey women are working as local and global citizens to make things better in their communities and the world at large.

2 The Hedgehog Review Critical Reflections on Contemporary Culture, Vol. 10, No. 3, Fall 2008, page __, published by Institute for Advanced Studies in Culture, University of Virginia
The quality of student learning is the central focus at Cottey. This core value is guided by the mission, and undergoes periodic consideration and review. Cottey has a rich heritage, and continues to pursue Virginia Alice Cottey’s vision of educating women. Any effort that devotes attention to student learning at the College includes consideration of her founding principles. She expressed those principles in the first paragraph of a speech she gave to alumnae and P.E.O.s in 1931:

“In establishing a school for girls, there was in the mind and heart of the founder an all-absorbing idea to contribute her mite toward preparing women for useful living. To enable them to meet the responsibilities of life in such a way that the small part of the world with which they came in contact might be a better place in which to live. To save our citizenship in so far as their influence extended, from fraud, deceit, indolence, superficiality, and infidelity.”

Her words above act as a guide for the faculty and staff currently charged with carrying out her vision. Working to make a difference in a community remains an important aspect of a Cottey education. For Virginia Alice Cottey, it was a point of pride that the small classes and close contact with professors enhanced this essential element of a liberal arts education. Later in the speech, she said: "The small college presents a far better opportunity for emphasizing this phase of education than the state school."

After acknowledging the opportunities state schools offer students and praising the work of the teachers in those schools, she continues: "...but they have not the opportunity, [of] the smaller college, where the instructors are in daily contact with the students, know them by name as well as by character,...where the relationships growing out of these conditions make possible a heart to heart contact..."

Cottey’s current curriculum has a number of opportunities that encourage civic engagement and social responsibility. Learning Through Service (IDS 192) is an interdisciplinary course designed to increase understanding between students and the communities they serve. Students work independently on a project and are closely supervised by a faculty member. In fall semester 2013, a student was supervised by Michael Denison, associate professor of theatre and speech, to produce a video of Join in for Joplin, a campus-wide, sustainable service-learning project on October 26. She recorded the activities of Cottey faculty, staff, and students who were assisting with the construction of new homes and the restoration of damaged homes for victims of the May 22, 2011, tornado. Another student received academic credit (IDS 192) for a project she designed for the Nevada Police Department to evaluate current patrol routes and suggest alternative routes based on where crime occurred in the city. She was supervised by Sarah Quick, Ph.D., assistant professor of anthropology and sociology.

There are also opportunities for students to link community service and citizenship with the content of a course in an academic discipline. For example, the Introduction to Women’s Studies (WST 105) class works with older women living in local public housing and the students write reflection papers about their work. Students in the dance course Creative Movement for Children (DAN 202) design lesson plans and teach dance to children in the Nevada Community.

Cottey is fortunate to have the words of Virginia Alice Cottey preserved in the College’s archives in the Library. The speech quoted her is among others preserved by encapsulation, which envelopes a document between two clear pieces of polyester. The edges of the polyester are then sealed or attached together. The preservation process allows us to read the founder’s speeches and see the handwritten notations she made. More importantly, it offers a glimpse into her heart and mind, and indication of what was most important to her. It is a link to the past that is vital to moving student learning forward.
Several students from Cottey volunteered on September 28 and October 26, 2013, with Join in for Joplin; a campus-wide, sustainable service-learning project. Join in for Joplin partners with AmeriCorps and Rebuild Joplin to assist with the construction of new homes and the restoration of damaged homes for victims of the May 22, 2011 tornado. Chaymaa Bakhalek, 2013 volunteer management intern provided volunteer coordination for the event. Renee Hampton, experiential learning coordinator and Erica Sigauke, director of spiritual life and diversity serve as staff sponsors for Join in for Joplin.

During the Fall 2013 semester, Cottey exceeded 3,000 hours of community service for the Join in for Joplin project. As an individual service-learning project, Caroline Guerin produced a video of October’s event to commemorate the 3,000 hour milestone reached by the students, staff and faculty of Cottey College that have volunteered with the Join in for Joplin project during the past two years. This was the college’s third visit to work with Rebuild Joplin.

Join in for Joplin began on the National Day of Service and Remembrance commemorating the 10th anniversary of 9/11. Cottey challenged volunteers to ‘Join in for Joplin’ the weekend of Sept. 10 & 11, 2011 and with AmeriCorps’ guidance, Cottey partnered with Joplin Family Worship Center to assist the facility in transitioning from a temporary to a permanent disaster relief facility and assist with disaster response training for facility staff. The training, provided by The HELP Foundation, was designed to prepare JWFC staff for future response to disasters nationwide.

JFWC became a major distribution site in Joplin for food, medical care, hygiene products, baby supplies, clothing, furniture and household goods. Join in for Joplin volunteers sorted and inventoried donations, boxed and moved supplies, tore down and moved large tents, built shelving and partitions, assisted with food service and, cleaned and painted the facility. Also, volunteers participated in the logistical organization of the disaster response training.

Cottey graduates Masho Godziashvili, 2011 volunteer management intern and Madeline Odell and Lexi Miles, Social Justice service-learning students coordinated the original event. Sophie Getia-Ashvili, 2012 volunteer management intern, Monica Hernandez, community service student worker, and Malyssa Dunson, spiritual and diversity student worker continued the Join in for Joplin project during the 2012-13 school year.

The Fall 2012 event returned student volunteers to the Joplin Family Worship Center’s disaster relief facility and the Spring 2013 event began Cottey’s partnership with Rebuild Joplin. Cottey student volunteers for the Join in for Joplin project have represented over 33 states and 12 countries. Transportation for student volunteers to Joplin, sixty miles to the South, is provided by the college.

Not counted into the 3,000 volunteer hours total was the immediate assistance provided to Joplin by students, staff and faculty of Cottey College while school was out of session in the summer of 2011. Kendra Earl, now a Cottey graduate, rallied two semi-trailer loads of supplies from Pennsylvania, the Physical Plant donated proceeds from an auction, a clothing and blood drive were held and, numerous staff and faculty donated time to immediate response in the hours, days and weeks following the tornado.

Many of the volunteers attended both Join in for Joplin events this semester. The third Join in for Joplin event for this school year will be held in late spring.

By Denise Hedges
Director of the Center for Women’s Leadership

Each semester Cottey’s Leadership, Experiences, and Opportunity (LEO) program—a four-level leadership certification program—offers a field trip for students enrolled. The field trip is structured so that it meets at least one of the requirements of the LEO certification program. Often, the field trip includes a service component to provide an opportunity for students to volunteer in the community.

This past fall, Cottey student leaders planned and facilitated an interactive workshop for high school girls called Peace Begins with Me to celebrate the United Nations’ International Day of Peace. Two workshops were held, one for Nevada youth and a second in Kansas City partnering with Young Women on the Move, a non-profit that empowers young women to live healthy lives filled with positive options.

The topics introduced at the workshop included the Cottey 21-Day Happiness Challenge, including activities for each happiness habit, an activity for students to explore their actions as a peacemaker or a peacebreaker, and a fun and lively Flash Mob for Peace. The entire workshop was planned and led by Cottey second-year LEO students.

The Flash Mob for Peace was a LEO Presidential Project for second-year student Priscilla Barrios. The Presidential Leadership Project is an optional service project done as students complete level 4 of the LEO program. The Presidential Project is intended as an additional opportunity for LEO students to practice their leadership skills. For her project, Priscilla worked with Christi Fulton, adjunct assistant professor of dance, and students in the advanced jazz class to set the choreography for the flash mob. Priscilla and her team then taught the basic choreography to Cottey students and the high school partners.

Both flash mobs drew media attention, including Joplin’s Fox 14 and KOAM, the Nevada Daily Mail, the Kansas City Star, and Kansas City’s KCTV 5. Second-year student, Caitlyn Reed, works as Cottey’s YouTube intern and filmed the day. You can watch Caitlyn’s video highlights at

In recognition of community service performed through the Join in for Joplin project, Cottey College staff members Erica Sigauke, director of spiritual life and diversity and Renee Hampton, experiential learning and student success coordinator were invited to participate in a panel discussion on Disaster Preparedness and Response at the 3rd Annual National Gathering of the President’s Interfaith and Community Service Campus Challenge on the campus of Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., Sept. 22-25, 2013.

Selection for the panel was based upon the President’s Interfaith and Community Service Campus Challenge proposal and first year report co-written by Sigauke and Hampton. Both women spoke on the planning, logistics and implementation of a sustainable disaster relief program. In addition, they spoke about the disaster preparedness training, sponsored by the HELP Foundation, in which Cottey students, faculty and staff participated while working with the Joplin Family Worship Center.

While at the National Gathering, Sigauke and Hampton attended sessions on evaluating interfaith engagement, student leadership, Campus Compact programs and the future of the President’s Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll. Cottey College is a member of the 2013 Honor Roll as well as Missouri Campus Compact.

Noted speakers at the Gathering were Eboo Patel, founder and president of the Interfaith Youth Core, Dr. Martha Kanter, undersecretary of U.S. Department of Education, Dr. John J. DeBioia, president, Georgetown University, Melissa Rogers executive director of the White House Office of Faith-based and Neighborhood Partnerships and Arne Duncan, secretary of U.S. Department of Education.

Based upon Cottey’s report of accomplishments in Joplin as well as other community service projects, Sigauke and Hampton were selected to participate in a photo opportunity with Secretary Duncan and Melissa Rogers. Only a few select colleges and universities were chosen for this honor.

Cottey College continues its commitment to Joplin by working with AmeriCorps and Rebuild Joplin. Students, faculty and staff have provided service to the Joplin community on three different dates in 2013 and have worked on 10 different homes that were either new builds or restoration of damaged homes. On October 26, 2013, Cottey College’s Join in for Joplin project exceeded 3,000 volunteers hours.

In recognition of their participation in projects like Join in for Joplin, ten Cottey students have earned certification through Missouri Campus Compact’s Semester of Service Passport program. Students are required to log volunteer hours in a Semester of Service Passport for their community service on and off campus as well as classroom and individual service-learning projects. Certification levels and the volunteer hours needed to achieve each level are Community Contributor, 45-69 hours; Community Changer, 70-99 hours; and Community Catalyst, 100+ hours. Cottey students receiving recognition for Fall, 2013 are:

- Chaymaa Bakhalek, Community Catalyst,
- Emily Cortes, Community Catalyst,
- Malyssa Dunson, Community Changer,
- Caroline Guerin, Community Changer,
- Monica Hernandez, Community Changer,
- Rachel McPherson, Community Contributor,
- Quynh Nguyen, Community Catalyst,
- Holly Presler, Community Catalyst,
- Jamie Waltenbaugh, Community Changer and
- Ashley Williamson, Community Catalyst.

Recognition for Cottey’s Service

By Renee Hampton, Experiential Learning and Student Success Coordinator
Dr. Angela Firkus, professor of history, came to Cottey College in fall 1999 after completing her Ph.D. in history at Purdue University. The doctorate was the culmination of her studies, but from a young age, Dr. Firkus had always been interested in history.

“I read whatever I could get my hands on as a kid but I found that history became my favorite topic,” she explained. “I have always been fascinated by people of the past. I loved imagining their world and thinking about why they made the decisions that they did. When I started taking history classes in college I realized that studying history was more than simply reading about people’s lives but that it involved becoming a detective and piecing together bits of evidence to make sense of the past. This realization turned history from simply an interest into a career choice.”

Most are familiar with the old expression, “Those who do not study the past are doomed to repeat it.” But is there any other value in studying history as part of the liberal arts curriculum?

“History is one of the oldest disciplines and the study of it requires all of the skills of the liberal arts: critical thinking and analysis, good communication, and appreciation of both depth and breadth of knowledge,” said Dr. Firkus. “In addition, the study of history is one of the things that defines us as humans.”

How does the study of history relate to citizenship, particularly Cottey’s mission to create “citizens in a global society”?

“A strong democracy relies on an informed populace. ‘Citizens in a global society’ need to know their own history as well as appreciate the histories of other peoples because it gives them insight into why things exist as they are as well as into how to avoid being doomed to repeat mistakes. It is more than that though. History can provide inspiration. Those who study the past know that tremendous change is possible.”

Dr. Firkus was asked to define citizenship, from her own perspective.

“For me citizenship is both about rights and responsibilities. As a citizen I, of course, can participate in politics and can enjoy the liberties listed in the Bill of Rights as well as equal protection under the law expressed in the 14th Amendment to the US Constitution. I also feel, though, that I am obligated to work to create a country that lives up to its ideals. For me that means contributing to my community so I am on the board of and an active volunteer for the Powers Museum in Carthage, [Missouri]. It means supporting social justice so I research and publish in the fields of women’s and Native American history. It also means teaching students, helping them to realize their potential, and offering them service learning opportunities through class and through Phi Theta Kappa, the two-year school honor society.”

Dr. Firkus has been involved in “leaving her name on Cottey history,” no pun intended. As most readers know, Cottey began offering baccalaureate programs just over two years ago, and was recently approved by The Higher Learning Commission to offer another new degree program, this one a BA in Liberal Arts. Dr. Firkus is one of the key faculty members in that particular degree.

“I started out simply teaching American Environmental History for the Environmental Studies program,” Dr. Firkus explained. “Since last spring I have been teaching the two women’s leadership classes required for the BA: WLS 310 and 490. Beginning this past fall I have been the coordinator of the liberal arts major program. I designed the curriculum for that and have five students who are as of right now planning on majoring in that. The program is small but I think it will grow quickly.”
Students at Cottey College have many opportunities in which to develop their talents and become better citizens of the world. Among these opportunities are two afterschool programs, coordinated by Dr. Julie Tietz and implemented by students earning credit or on a volunteer basis. Students That Open Minds to Possibilities (STOMP) was begun in 2007 in partnership with the Nevada Housing Authority. STOMP aims to expose disadvantaged children to the possibilities the world has to offer and to inspire them to set and accomplish high goals to make a difference in their community. It is held twice a week after school at a low-income housing development where approximately 10 children (grades K-5) regularly attend. Cottey students create weekly lesson plans, including science demonstrations, art projects, games, guest speakers, and homework time. This past semester, STOMP participants danced to fiddle music from Dr. Sarah Quick, assistant professor of anthropology and sociology; played on African drums with student and SGA president Fortunate Zondo and Rev. Erica Sigauke, director of spiritual life and campus diversity; and learned about nutrition from Rachel Hansen of the Healthy Nevada Initiative.

Students United at Cottey College to Empower, Educate, and Develop (SUCCEED) was begun in 2008 in partnership with Sheldon R-VIII school district; in 2010, Bronaugh R-VII school district became a partner as well. SUCCEED also aims to expose children to the possibilities the world has to offer by promoting awareness of other countries and their cultures. It is held once a week at Cottey College, and about 20 children (grades K-5) attend each time. Cottey students create lesson plans with an international or cross-cultural focus, including math/science activities, art projects, games, and music. This past semester, SUCCEED participants learned about geography, food, customs, and language of countries such as Ecuador, Vietnam, and New Zealand.

Whether they are preparing lesson plans for STOMP or SUCCEED, student leaders have to consider what lessons or values they wish to convey. For example, if children giggle at a country’s custom they see as unusual, the student leaders have an opportunity to teach about diversity and how to react to difference. If children are arguing over crayons or calling another child a name, the student leaders have an opportunity to teach about respect. When teaching such lessons, student leaders experience a clarification of their own values. In addition, student leaders must be responsible and reliable in their attendance and preparation; not only are these traits important to the success of the program, they are important traits to be modeled for the children. Thus, student leaders become good citizens as they also teach about good citizenship.

“If children giggle at a country’s custom they see as unusual, the student leaders have an opportunity to teach about diversity and how to react to difference.”

-Dr. Julie Tietz
Does travel to a developing country change the way someone defines what it means to be a citizen in a global society? For nine years, Cottey has taken a small group of students to Guatemala on a service learning/social justice trip over the winter break. Although the first and last days of this 10-day trip feature some typical tourist options, a week is spent in the small village of San Lucas Toliman where students experience a very different lifestyle.

During the week, students spend time working in a couple of the mission projects. These include a women’s center, a reforestation project, a coffee roasting collective, and a stove building project. This year, the participants spent two half days day at the reforestation project, and a day in rural Aldea Panimaquip building stoves out of cement block.

The schedule also includes time to learn from the locals. Juan, a 94-year-old Mayan, taught Kachiquel, the indigenous language for that area around San Lucas. Students learned to count to 20 and some basic words and phrases. They also enjoyed a morning in Nueva Providencia learning how to make corn tortillas and tamales on a wood-burning stove from a woman named Cornelia, assisted by her seven-year-old daughter, Daisy.

Every day the participants took their turn serving food and doing dishes for the other volunteers in the parish as well.

After returning home, we asked the participants: What do you now think it means to be a “citizen in a global society.” Has your idea or definition changed since you’ve been to Guatemala? If so, how?

“To be a proper citizen of a global society it is important to take the time to learn the customs of each place you visit. Learn the language, the food, the parties, the hardships. Talk to the families of everyone and make yourself known in the community through listening, not by forcing others to hear you. Guatemala was definitely a defining point in my consideration to what it meant to be a global citizen. I learned to ask questions, and how important patience is when it comes to making a positive impact on the people around you.”

Shannon Kreutzer

“I believe that in order to truly understand this world and its people, you must immerse yourself in cultures outside your own and step outside your comfort zone. Although my definition of a global citizen did not change, traveling to Guatemala forced me to do just this, in more than one way. I learned how important it is for global citizens to learn and to be willing to listen. So many people do not take the time to stop and watch this world—traveling to Guatemala forced me to do just this, in more than one way. I learned how important it is for global citizens to learn and to be willing to listen. So many people do not take the time to stop and watch this world—traveling to Guatemala and having the experiences I did there allowed me to not only both learn and listen, but to also begin to understand my place in this world, a vital step for anyone who wants to make an impact on a global level.”

Meghan Ford

“One of the things that I think is important for a citizen on a global platform is to recognize that cultural differences are just different, not bad. I believe it is important to recognize that the culture in which you were raised is not de facto the ‘best culture.’ I also think it is important to become accustomed to being uncomfortable in new environments/places/cultures so that you do not filter the environment through the lens of discomfort. Accepting the discomfort will allow it to lessen over time as more and more new environments are visited. A favorite quote of mine for which I do not remember the reference is ‘I am afraid, therefore you must be scary.’”

History and Citizenship: Alumnae from 1964 and 1965 Reminisce

The many documentaries, conspiracy theory resurgences, and commemorative ceremonies marking the 50th anniversary of the assassination of John F. Kennedy last fall served as inspirations for a Viewpoint article about how that event shaped Cottey students’ concept of what it means to be a good citizen.

 Citizenship is defined by Webster’s Dictionary as “the quality of an individual’s response to membership in a community.” From Signing of the Cottey Book and learning about the Honor code, through the traditions over Commencement Weekend, students come to a deeper understanding of what it means to be a member of the Cottey community. Without women stepping forward to learn, lead, and make a difference, much of what makes Cottey so special would not occur.

As with the rest of the world, alumnae from the Class of 1964 and 1965 vividly recall what they were doing when they learned President Kennedy had been shot. “I remember clearly sitting at my desk in Colorado-Minear Suite working on a paper that was due for my English class at 1 or 2 p.m.,” says Mary Beaty Edelen ’65. “The news was on the radio around 12:30 p.m. that he was dead. The paper I was writing didn’t get finished that day, and I think that my English professor allowed me to bring it in the next day. And now it doesn’t matter what grade I received on it.”

Mary says students, faculty, and staff were all sad and shocked by the news, but were required to be in class. She recalls that Cottey’s president at the time decided that everyone was better together than being alone. There were no counselors available, and she doesn’t recall there being a special Chapel service, but the event did greatly affect her sense of citizenship.

“I, for one, had an even greater sense that my career path was to be politics. I wanted to serve my state or country in some capacity, even though women were not involved in those roles in the early 60s.”

Mary graduated from Cottey, and went on to major in history with a minor in government. She was elected to the South Dakota legislature and served for 18 years.

“It was at Cottey, and that moment in time, that forged my life’s path to serve others.”

Jen Wren (now Charpentier), a senior from New Orleans, was in one of the small study rooms in Main hall when Mr. Pursley, assistant professor of psychology, stuck his head in the room and said the President and Governor Connally had been shot in Dallas. “I kept waiting for his punch line,” comments Jen. When she realized it was no joke, she went back to her dorm’s rec room, which was one of the only places on campus with a TV.

Congress passes the Equal Pay Act, making it illegal for employers to pay a woman less than what a man would receive for the same job.

Title IX of the Education Amendment bans sex discrimination in federally funded education programs. As a result, participation of women in professional schools and athletics programs skyrockets.

Cottey College begins celebrating its 100th year

May 20: The Higher Learning Commission authorizes the college to register current students in the three selected bachelor of arts programs.

Cottey’s first “Capstone Trip” takes place. The senior class travels to London for a week of spring break, primarily paid for by the college.

The sentiment of Cottey as an extended family is echoed by the words of Lysbeth Burgess, managing editor of Tower, in the November 1963 issue of the student newspaper. “The staff of the Tower would like to take this opportunity to thank the student body, the faculty and the administration for the support they have shown in the past weeks. We extend our wishes for a memorable Thanksgiving.”

Looking back on that fall, Lysbeth recalls that the bond between her class was especially strong by the time they returned to campus in the fall of 1963. “We were already a class, with a shared history and established friendships—many of which have lasted all our lives,” she says. “We had been together on campus through the Cuban missile crisis, which we ‘survived’ thanks to Kennedy. Perhaps the assassination, combined with Cuba, united us in a way that did not affect our juniors, who had ridden out the Cuban ordeal at home.”

Lysbeth says her belief that activism as a critical component of citizenship came into being at Cottey. I know that for myself, living through those two events, and witnessing their effect on friends and colleagues, served to make me a political activist whenever I perceive danger to anything I care for.

“We were all very aware of the inevitable, though almost invisible, role that history plays in our lives. That awareness of history was, of course, only accentuated by going to classes on a century-old campus, where one always expected to find Virginia Alice playing croquet on the lawn.”

With that in mind, we invite Cottey alumnae to walk down memory lane using the timeline below. For those who are not alumnae, perhaps these items will help you recall your own life experiences, and how they helped shape your concept of what it means to be a good citizen.

Dress codes loosen further, allowing pants to be worn in class instead of only on Saturdays.
January 31st closed the five year first-ever comprehensive campaign for Cottey College – A Defining Moment. Perhaps you’ve heard the expression sometimes used to describe a job, “Five years and who’s counting?” One group -- the Campaign Cabinet has not only worked for five years but they counted on everyone: committees, volunteers, faculty and staff, campaign events, and generous donors. Sixteen women, nearly all volunteers with little or no fund-raising experience, committed to lead the campaign and to raise the largest amount of money in the history of the College -- a staggering $35,000,000.

Undaunted, and with support from consultants early in the campaign, work of the committees was outlined to reach a large constituency of alumnae, P.E.O.s, and friends of women’s education. The learning curve was steep, the job huge but they came with experience as leaders in the alumnae association and past officers of P.E.O. State and International Chapters to join ranks with a fervent belief in the future of the College and the need to raise the funds necessary to support students and advance the school to national prominence.

They recruited thousands of volunteers in both the United States and Canada: designed celebrations communications sent electronically to 16,000 individuals; created a competition among local P.E.O. chapters with nearly 6,000 chapters racing their horses to the finish line; organized a network of 5,400 P.E.O.s who kept their chapters informed through monthly C3 messages; planned 96 awareness events with more than 3,800 guests attending with follow-up calls made by other volunteers after each event. They raised money to renovate Neale Hall; and they recognized and honored donors.

The effort of this team across North America brought results. More than 20,000 donors made pledges and gifts and of these 9,000 donors made a first time gift to the College. Local P.E.O. chapters contributed $8,488,775. The alumnae gave more than they have ever given in previous campaigns, a record $4,341,844. And, the goal of $35,000,000 was reached. In fact, the goal was exceeded for a total of $39.6 million.

Sixteen women stepped forward and said “Yes” when asked to serve on the Cabinet. We thank them and the thousands of volunteers and donors who contributed in making this campaign a success.

Five years and who’s counting? Well we are! We are counting on great new opportunities for Cottey students. We are counting on the elevation of our school to national recognition and status among women’s colleges. We are counting on devoted alumnae, P.E.O.s, BILs, and friends of the College to continue to support this premier institution – Cottey College.

Cottey College has completed its Defining Moment Campaign

This initiative is a comprehensive campaign supporting five priorities: scholarship endowment, faculty chairs, library enhancement, unrestricted funding, and the construction of a new fine arts instructional building.

Many supporters have given during the term of this initiative. From September 26, 2013, through January 29, 2014, the following P.E.O. chapters and members, alumnae, faculty, staff, parents and friends have supported Cottey. We are deeply grateful for this support.

Joan Maupin, a P.E.O. and financial advisor from Florida, learned from an early age about the value of giving. "My parents instilled in me the importance of giving back at an early age beginning with the church where I was a member," she said. "I was often reminded that it cost money to have the lights on, to print bulletins, and keep it warm in the winter. Also, to help others as our church did."

That spirit of philanthropy continued to grow. Joan has been an avid supporter of A Defining Moment Campaign since she first attended an awareness event in March 2011. At the event, Joan asked Carla Farmer, campaign manager, how she could help the Campaign as a volunteer and the following month she became a member of the Individual Gifts Committee. Two months later, Joan made her first gift to the Campaign to name the small dance studio in the Fine Arts Instructional Building (FAIB).

She chose to name that space in particular because of her "love of dance and the creative arts." She also chose to make that gift because of her membership in the P.E.O. Sisterhood.

Why is it important to give to Cottey? we asked. "I am one of the 250,000 members who own Cottey College and I want it to thrive, continue to grow, and provide educational opportunities for women," she answered.

Joan has served as a role model for the Individual Gifts Committee for nearly three years. Through her profession as a financial advisor, she has visited with clients and P.E.O.s about Cottey and the Campaign. As a professional financial advisor, she has advice for others about planning their giving.

"It is very important to plan our giving as part of our estate planning, but also share with your children your plan to set aside part of your estate for Cottey," she said. "You are 'giving back' so other women may also have the opportunity to achieve their educational goals."

Joan has taken her own advice and made a planned estate gift to the College in addition to her initial gift to the FAIB.

When asked if she had any final words to the Viewpoint readers regarding philanthropy, she added:

"Giving is much more rewarding than receiving and a parent or grandparent can be a good role model for children and emphasize the importance of giving."

Two Faculty Announce Their Retirement

It is with gratitude and high regard that Cottey announces the retirement plans of Mr. Michael Denison, associate professor of theatre, and Miss Mary McNerney, associate professor of education and advisement coordinator. Both intend to retire at the conclusion of this academic year. We are grateful for their years of dedicated service as educators, advisors, and mentors to students and colleagues alike and wish them well in their retirement years.

1. Mr. Denison joined the faculty at Cottey in 2000 and has made many significant contributions to the College since that time. He has served as co-sponsor of Delta Psi Omega and of the International Friendship Circle in addition to being a member of the Rank and Tenure Committee and the Curriculum Committee. Mr. Denison has authored publications and presented papers at conferences, including co-authoring a chapter, "NASA in the Movies" in the Columbia Companion to American History on Film. Mr. Denison has received several Lillian Corley awards during his career at Cottey, including a summer writing retreat in Thailand and collaborating with Dr. Bruce Holman to photograph a number of vintage garments in the Cottey collection. He has served as technical director for the Haidee and Allen Wild Center for the Arts.

2. Miss McNerney joined the faculty in 1980 in the physical education department and as coordinator of intramurals and coach for the intercollegiate volleyball team. During her career at Cottey she has many noteworthy contributions to the College, for example, she assisted with designing and planning a new approach to orientation and served as co-director of orientation for several years. This orientation model was so successful that it is still in use at the college. Miss McNerney received a faculty enrichment grant from the College and a merit award from the College in recognition of her exemplary leadership and innovation in the implementation of a First-Year Seminar program. She has been the coordinator of academic advising and chair of the Academic Advising Committee since 1991.

Cottey to Become Smoke-Free Campus Beginning July 1, 2014

In the interest of reducing harm from tobacco use and secondhand smoke, providing an environment that encourages persons to be tobacco-free, reducing long-term health-care costs, and promoting a campus culture of wellness, Cottey College is establishing a tobacco-free policy.

This policy is being introduced over a period of one year to facilitate a smooth transition to a smoke and tobacco-free campus. A full implementation of the policy, along with any necessary guidelines for compliance, will be effective beginning July 1, 2014.

For the purposes of this policy, tobacco use will be defined as the possession of any lighted tobacco products, or the use of any type of smokeless tobacco including electronic cigarettes and chewing tobacco. The use of any such products will not be permitted on any College-owned property, including, but not limited to buildings, grounds, parking areas, walkways, recreational and sporting facilities and College-owned or leased vehicles.

This policy will apply to faculty, staff, students, clients, contractors, vendors and visitors, and will be in effect during and after normal campus hours as well as during all College sponsored events. In selected areas, "Tobacco-free Campus" signs will be posted to ensure that all understand Cottey College's commitment to a tobacco-free campus.

Ultimately, the successful transition will depend upon the thoughtfulness, respect, and cooperation of everyone, and all members of our community will share the responsibility of following and enforcing the policy.
Cottey College announces the addition of two more intercollegiate sports beginning in fall 2014. Cross-country and tennis will be added to the three sports currently offered at the College: basketball, softball, and volleyball.

“The Board of Trustees approved these two proposals at their fall meeting in October,” said Dr. Judy Rogers, President of Cottey College. “We are so pleased to offer more opportunities for young women to compete in athletics and learn valuable leadership skills on our campus.”

“These two sports are perfect additions to our athletic lineup,” said Dave Ketterman, head basketball coach and athletic director. “With the local focus on the Healthy Nevada initiative and lifetime fitness, cross-country and tennis are two sports our athletes can continue long after they graduate.”

“We also want prospective student/athletes to know that these are scholarship sports,” added Ketterman. “Athletic scholarships are available for prospective students who want to compete intercollegiately for the Comets in any of our sports.”

Cottey is searching for a part-time coaches for both sports. Job descriptions are available on the College website, www.cottey.edu. High school athletes interested in continuing their careers in cross-country or tennis at Cottey should forward that information to the Office of Enrollment Management.

In addition to funding the start-up costs for the two new sports, the board also supported the addition of part-time assistant coaches for the three existing sports as an important step in strengthening the athletic programs. Cottey is pleased to introduce two new members of the Comet athletic staff.

Samantha Robertson will serve as the assistant softball coach. Robertson has previously served as a dedicated volunteer softball coach since 2012. Robertson earned her A.A. and A.S. at Coffeyville Community College, where she played collegiate softball under then assistant coach Shelli Stanley. Robertson is completing her BSED in secondary history education at Pittsburg State University. She hails from Lamar, Missouri, where she has been involved in softball as both a player, youth umpire, and coach.

MaKayla Grahn will serve as the new assistant basketball coach and athletic recruitment coordinator for our two new programs. Grahn had a very successful collegiate basketball career, playing at Howard Junior College, Cisco Junior College, and Rockhurst University. She earned an A.A. in Education from Cisco Junior College, and her B.A. in history with a minor in theology from Rockhurst University. In addition to her collegiate playing career, Grahn has worked at basketball camps throughout the state of Texas, and is a former AAU Summer League coach. She hails from Lovelady, Texas, where she played for her most demanding coach, her father, who is a very successful high school basketball coach.
